

Health Intelligence Report

*Breast Screening:
3-Year Coverage of Women Aged 53-70
As at 31st March 2013*

July 2014

Prepared by
Emily Silcock, Public Health Information Officer
Kerry Oakton, Senior Public Health Intelligence Analyst

The Kent and Medway Public Health Observatory (KMPHO)
established 1st April 2008.

Vision

The Kent and Medway Public Health Observatory which is hosted by Kent County Council exists to influence and inform action to improve health, reduce inequality and enhance well-being for people living and working in the Kent and Medway health economy. We do this by providing impartial and robust health intelligence and insight.

Mission

To deliver clear and unambiguous public health intelligence and insight to inform and prioritise public health action and strategic direction.

To utilise disparate health and health related data sources to provide a comprehensive assessment of the public health profile of communities across Kent and Medway.

To support individuals, teams and organisations across Kent and Medway to improve health and reduce inequality.

Values

- A commitment to improve health and well-being and to reduce health inequalities.
- To work collaboratively within Kent County Council and with our partners across the health economy.
- To act with integrity and strive for excellence in analytic rigor.
- To provide a responsive and innovative intelligence service that adds value, insight and direction to public health action.

Interim Kent Director of Public Health: Andrew Scott-Clark
Head of Health Intelligence: Gerrard Abi-Aad

Background

The NHS Breast Screening Programme was established by the Department of Health in 1988 and achieved coverage in England by the mid 1990s. The Screening Programme nationally screens around 1.9 million women a year¹. Using a call and recall system, women are invited to attend for mammography every three years from the age of 50. The Screening Programme aims to reduce the number of women who develop invasive cancer, and to reduce the number of women who die from it.

The Screening Programme is designed to detect and treat early abnormalities which left untreated may develop into cancer of the breast. Early detection and treatment can reduce mortality from breast cancer by 20% in women invited for screening².

One measure of the effectiveness of a screening programme is coverage. The NHS Breast Screening Programme³ defines coverage as the proportion of women resident and eligible for screening who have had a screening mammogram at least once in the previous three years. In practice, the best count of resident women is the number of women of relevant age on the Primary Care Organisation register and so this is used as a proxy.

Eligibility extends to all women within the relevant age range. A woman is deemed ineligible and discounted from coverage calculations if her programme status has been recorded as 'ceased due to bilateral mastectomy'. Those ceased with reason unknown are deemed eligible and are counted. This may potentially result in an incorrect coverage figures, although the error will be small.

A woman may opt out of the breast screening programme as she wishes. However, she is still counted within the eligible population and the opportunity to rejoin the programme remains at all times.

The coverage figures within this report relate to the proportion of eligible women aged 53 to 70 years who have had an NHS mammography recorded at least once in the previous 3 years. It includes eligible women who self-refer for a test. It is currently measured for the female population from the age of 53 to allow the Screening Programme three years to carry out the first test for each woman once she has reached the age of 50. Data is taken from the Primary Care Information System which itself is populated by the KC63 returns of breast screening units.

National standards and targets require a minimum rate of 70% coverage within each Primary Care Organisation. Coverage rates have been colour coded within this report to illustrate performance compared to the target level and are presented by GP practice and aggregate levels by clinical commissioning group (CCG), county and national in order to provide various points of comparison.
